What is an abused child?

Any child who has been:

- physically harmed ,
- seriously deprived of nutrition, care or affection, or
- sexually molested ,

is an abused child. So 'abuse' can mean both actively hurting a child or passively failing to take proper care of a child. Children may be abused at any age.

We do not have absolutely accurate figures on child abuse, but conservative experts estimate that 2,000 to 3,000 cases occur in Ontario each year.

How can we recognize child abuse?

There are various signs of child abuse:

- a physically abused child may have bruises, burns, cuts or scars.
- a neglected child could appear malnourished, frequently over-tired, dirty, or inappropriately clothed.
- a sexually molested child may have bruises, lacerations, vaginal discharge or V.D.
- an emotionally abused child may be: unnaturally quiet and timid, or overly active and aggressive; afraid of strangers; or looking to strangers for affection.

How common is it?

Child abuse is a major problem — medically, legally and socially. While there has been an increase in the number of reported cases, many instances of abuse still go unreported. This means that many abused children and their families are not receiving the help which they so desperately need.

Who would hurt a child?

Many of the people who hurt children:

- are lonely or isolated,
- are experiencing a number of problems,
- have difficult-to-handle children,
- may have been abused themselves, or
- have had no opportunity to learn how to care for children.

The person who abuses a child needs just as much help as the child.

What can we do about it?

If you suspect that a child is being abused, hurt or neglected, get in touch with your local CAS or family and children's services association immediately. Check the telephone directory for the office closest to you. Calls about child abuse can be made at any time, day or night, seven days a week. Each report is confidential and is handled discreetly by an experienced social worker.

Early reporting of child abuse is vital. A family can often receive the help and guidance needed to prevent a major crisis. When a CAS investigates a report of abuse, a worker will interview the family and children concerned. Often counselling at this early stage can prevent painful separation of parents and children at a later date.

The Children's Aid Society and the Law

There are 50 CASs in Ontario. Each one works cooperatively with local hospitals, police departments, schools, and community agencies to prevent and deal with child abuse. In accordance with The Child Welfare Act, you are required to report any suspected case to a CAS. The CAS is then required to investigate the matter.

The Act states:

“Every person who has information of the abandonment, desertion or need for protection of a child or the infliction of abuse upon a child shall forthwith report the information to a society.”

“. . . and no action for making the report shall be instituted against any person who reports the information to a society . . . unless the giving of the information is done maliciously or without reasonable grounds to suspect that the information is true.”

(The Child Welfare Act, 1978, c. 85, s. 49)

As well as making it a citizen's duty to report, the Act also requires professionals and officials to report suspected cases of child abuse. This means that people such as teachers, policemen, doctors and nurses, who are in contact with children on a daily basis, must report, by law, suspected cases of abuse. Any professional person who fails to report suspected abuse may be fined up to $1,000.

The children's aid society is concerned about both the child's welfare and the abuser's rehabilitation. But the CAS cannot act without information. It is up to you to report incidents of child abuse and neglect.

What are you doing about child abuse? If you are concerned about the welfare of a child or wish to learn more about child abuse, contact your local children's aid society, or family and children's services.
